

School holds talent show during pandemic

Quest Martial Arts Academy held a talent show over Zoom Video Communication from 6:30 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. May 22 in an effort to stay connected with their clients.

The students who participated in the talent show demonstrated a variety of content that surpassed the usual activities of martial arts. Students performed songs, jokes, dance routines and magic tricks.

“It definitely gave them confidence because even though it was online, these kids were very brave to turn on their cameras and sing or dance,” [REDACTED], an employee at Quest Martial Arts Academy, said.

The talent show is one of the activities the company has offered since its closure due to the global pandemic COVID-19. These online activities have been offered to bring the students together and remain in contact.

The talent show allowed the students to interact with one another. The students had something new to look forward to, [REDACTED], a client of the company, said.

The talent show had a total of 15 participants between the ages of 4 to 16. The event had more viewers as families watched online while others assisted their children.

The company has offered a variety of activities online since the closure. The talent show had the most participants, [REDACTED] business owner, said.

The company anticipates the continual usage of online activities to stay connected with clients. It has already presented activities such as an art class that was not available before the closure.

“Absolutely, this would be a great choice when we are not able to physically be there,” [REDACTED] said in response to having more online activities.

Whether the online platform will be used for local students or those from other parts of town, it is going to remain a component of the company, [REDACTED] said.
